

DISCOVERNOW FOR CORPORATIONS

Multiple Touch Points For Your Data - The more times your data is handled the more likely it is to be mishandled. This raises security concerns, spoliation issues and general reliability of data being transferred from one resource to the next.

Inconsistencies In Deliverables - Inconsistency runs rampant in a process where various vendors interpret instructions differently than others, employing divergent strategies and technologies that yield confusing results for client data.

Pricing - Utilizing multiple service providers does not typically allow for preferred rates. Additionally, you are likely subject to a variety of pricing models of which some may be antiquated by industry standards.

Redundant Processing -

It is very likely that the same data is being processed multiple times across multiple matters. Not only might the same data be processed by different providers with different technologies, you are paying to have that same data processed multiple times.
